Possibility!

An interactive adventure for children on the autism spectrum

A full-body photograph of a young boy dressed as a cowboy. He is wearing a light-colored straw hat, a red and blue plaid shirt over a blue and white striped t-shirt, and light blue jeans with patches. He is holding a yellow bucket in his right hand and has his left arm extended outwards. He is smiling and standing against a plain white background.

A Palette of Possibility explores color in all its various forms and is perfect for children having their first or their tenth experience in the theater. Audience members will participate and interact with the performers as we invent new ways of thinking about color in all the wonderful places it shows up in our world. Helpful guides will gently introduce children to the world and let them go at their own pace to experience the magic of the production. Primarily nonverbal, the show is presented in a sensory-friendly environment that is warm, friendly and inviting. Children are free to move about as necessary and will enjoy the “shush-free” space where they are free to express themselves however they need to. Every aspect of the show has been designed with children on the spectrum in mind, ensuring the best possible experience for your students.

Families with students on the autism spectrum may attend public shows for just $5 per ticket.
